Walter Badet

Specializes in helping people to:

Attain self-confidence so they can feel comfortable making decisions for their horse.

Appreciate the significance of bonding, both how and why.

Understand the importance of the horse not being "perfect" and accepting that, so you can both improve.

Respect your equine partner as a sentient being before expecting to gain his trust.

Become comfortable in encountering problems and solving them on your own (with proper preparation) according to your individual horse.

Understand that mutual respect, love, confidence, communication and safety are required from BOTH parties. You and your horse together.

Remember that changing your horse will automatically involve that horse changing you. This will improve and expand your life in general.

Develop your Own Horsemanship™ to think outside the norm by simply listening to your heart.

Rebecca Wyatt, EMT

Can help you learn the importance of keeping your horse soft and supple, to help prevent injuries.
